Crackdown on Cryptocurrency Traders

The ATO have expressed concern over the way taxpayers believe capital gains are applied to cryptocurrency trading.

They have reiterated that capital gains on cryptocurrency is similar to the treatment of shares. When cryptocurrencies are bought, sold, traded or even exchanged for another cryptocurrency, capital gains tax ('CGT') may apply and must be declared on the tax payers income tax return.

Datamatching to see where currencies are interacting with banks, financial institutions and crypto online exchanges is being used to ensure that tax payers are accurately reporting their trading to the ATO.

A CGT discount may be available to tax payers who have held their currencies for at least 12 months.

Tax Office Monitoring Work Related Expenses

The ATO have signaled that they will be closely monitoring claims for working from home expenses due to an increase in the amount of people working from home during COVID.

While the ATO is expecting an increase in these types of claims, tax payers are cautioned not to use a "cut and paste" method when claiming work related expenses. Usual claims for laundry may not be applicable where the tax payer is working from home.

Additionally, the 'shortcut' method for calculating working from home expenses has been extended for use in the 2021 tax year. This means you will be able to claim a flat 0.80c per hour rate for each hour worked at home. Alternatively, the traditional method of calculation can be used. Please discuss with us which option is most beneficial for you.

A 4 week diary of hours worked or a timesheet from your place of employment should be provided to substantiate any claims made.
